Emotions PASHMINA

Pashmina is the epitome of quality cashmere of the noblest of origins. It is obtained high in the Himalayas from the soft breast-down of the chyangra goat. The delicate, extremely rare hair is carefully combed out from the animal by hand and separated from all covering hair. Each goat only supplies around 50g of the delicate down every year. For Sanders pashmina blankets, fine-threaded maco batiste is additionally refined with cashmere. The flexible fabric makes the blanket very supple.

Cashmere wool has been used for many a year for exquisite sleep equipment. In the inhospitable heights of Tibet, cashmere goats are kept to supply world demand for this unique noble hair. Cashmere can fully reveal its warming qualities as a filling for high-quality duvets and ensures a pleasant temperature and good sleeping climate.

Emotions EIDERDOWN

Eiderdown is the most valuable down in the world. This rarity among down fillings comes from the eider duck, a protected species. The habitat of these birds is polar regions, especially Iceland. The much coveted down, which they use to upholster and insulate their nests, is harvested by hand. Only 20 g a year can be collected from each nest after breeding. Expensive cleaning guarantees the unique quality of this class for kings.

Emotions CAMEL

Asian camels from the high plateaus are exposed to variations in temperature of up to 50°C. The characteristics of the animal's hair protect it from the extremely cold nights and the heat haze throughout the day. Thus camel hair is especially suitable for high-quality duvet fillings. Luxurious batiste is wrapped round this noble hair. It makes the blanket soft to the touch and provides a soft, flowing structure.
